Leo XIII.'s Secretary Consulted Before the Loubet Protest—Wes the Wording Merry del Val'e?-Cardinal Svampa's Visit to the King Means Conciliation Throughout Italy Outside of Rome.

ROME, June 4.- There is no doubt to-day among persons who keep in touch with what goes on at the Vatican that Cardinal Rampolla has taken the part with Pius X. of an experience and deeded counsellor n accordance with his previous career. How did this happen? The question is all the more interesting because the return to the stage of the former Secretary of State of Leo XIII. coincided with M. Loubet's

Every one knows that after the election of Pius X. and after he had passed over his power to his successor and friend, Mgr. Merry del Val, Cardinal Rampolla withdrew into voluntary and dignified retirement. His relations with the new Pope were reduced to the mere requirements of official duty and in this he showed his tact and delicacy toward the new Secretary of State. In the infrequent conversations which he had with Pius X. Cardinal Rampolla never talked politics, limiting himself to matters that affected the Congregation of Councils of high prelates to which he belonged.

Nevertheless, his enemies, and some of these are in very high places in the Papal court, affected to see in this voluntary retirement of the ex-Secretary of State a disgrace that had been put upon him by Pius X., and they did their best to turn this supposed disgrace, the news of which they carefully spread among the public, into a real one. They thus came to mistake their desire for reality. They thought that Pius X. would really be ready to act against his former competitor in the Conclave, and recently they tried to strike decisive blow. Some time ago Cardinal Celesia, Archbishop of Palermo, died. Immediately the enemies of Cardinal Rampolla spread the report that Pius X, had decided to make the ex-Secretary of State his successor; thus he would end his career in his native island, far from Rome, far from the Vatican, far from the management of the affairs of the Holy See. In a word, it meant the political death of Cardinal Rampolla.

Of course it was only a rumor, but it tool so much importance, it was accompanied by so bitter comment that the Cardinal decided to take action for once. One fine evening he left his retreat at Santa Marta, crossed St. Peter's and, after asking for an audience with Pius X., begged to put an end to all these intrigues. Pius X. then showed how wrong people had been in bringing his name into these false reports. He showed the liveliest and most sincere indignation. He assured Cardinal Rampolla that he had never ceased to hold him in esteem and affection. Further, the Pope reproached the Cardinal in a friendly way for the voluntary exile into which he had gone, an exile the more to be regretted because the Holy See needed more than ever the counsel and support of "its highest intelligent" and those who "had randered such priceless services to the Church dur-ing the Pontificate of his predecessor."

His meaning was clear. Plus X, meant that the Cardinal should give him his opinion about the line of conduct to be pursued when the visit of M. Loubet, which was then impsending, should eccur. The ex-Secretary of State did not hesitate. Observing always his scrupulous delicacy toward Cardinal Merry del Val, he urged the Pope to have him called in, and when he arrived he explained clearly what his ideas were as the manner of conduct on the occasion of M. Loubet's journey.

Should the President of the republic be received at the Vatioan? Leo XIII. would pertainly have received him if he had made the visit last year. But since last year a great many events had occurred and precedents had been created both at the Vatican and at Paris, so that any contrivance to accept the visit had become impossible. The ex-Secretary of State was therefore of opinion that M. Loubet's visit to Rome must be endured; that it was necessary to protest at once against the journey, but that the protest must be draw up in such terms that while merely preserving the dignity of the Church in the eyes of honest people. Should not serve in any way as a pretext for those who naturally would try to find in it or to point out in it matter of provocation.

On the whole, Cardinal Rampolla's advice was to follow the procedure which was dear to Leo XIII. and which worked until he died in the matter of his relations with the French Republic: namely, to call attention to all violent acts, to protest in case of need against those that were selfevident, but always to avoid carefully seemdinal Merry del Val agreed with Cardinal Rampolla. Pius X. approved, and at the end of the conference it was decided that Cardinal Merry del Val should draw up the protest against M. Loubet's journey in that

Do the terms of that protest really agree with that spirit and express the actual thought of Cardinal Rampolla? Would the latter have drawn up the document as it was by Cardinal Merry del Val? What is certain is that what I have related is as exact as the story of anything can be that took place in the Vatican in the Pope's cabinet It will be enough to prove, I think, that Cardinal Rampolla is far from having lost the authority and influence at the Vatican which makes his enemies despair.

Many Italians and foreign papers are ex aggerating the importance of Cardinal Svampa's visit to the King of Italy at Bologna. According to them this "historic" event marks a decisive change in the policy of the Holy See, Formerly, they say, the Pope never authorized any action of that kind. The innovation is particularly serious owing to the circumstance that before 1870 Bologna, next to Rome, was the capital, the most important political metropolis of the Papal States. It is, therefore these newspapers add, a capitulation to accomplished facts and a retreat in the matter of the Roman question. Coming after M. Loubet's journey to Rome this re-ception at Bologna increases in value and importance. The demonstration is lacking neither in skill nor in perfidy. It is built, unfortunately on ignorance and the perversion of truth. Leo XIII. always permitted that ecclesiastical homage should be paid to the sovereign of Italy in the provi At Venice Cardinal Sarto carried out this delicate duty with his usual good grace. At Bologna itself by Leo XIII.'s desire, the illustrious Cardinal Battaglini, whom Cardinal Casoki had picked out for the tiars, visited Queen Margherita in the Cathedral. Doubtless in the former Papal Cathedral. Doubtiess in the Papacy pre-States the hierarchy and the Papacy preand more commented upon than elsewhere. But never outside of Rome has the Church ignored the established Government. It is necessary to establish fairly the funds-

HAS PIUS X. A NEW POLICY? Question and ecologisatical affairs. With his test and feeling for opportunism, Lee XIII. had concentrated his demands on Rome, a free city, the property of the Pope and of the Universal Church. That will probably be the solution of history, the new form of Papal liberty. For it preserved at once rights of Catholicism, the apostolic office, the dignity of the two powers and Italian unity which Italian Catholics do not dream of falling into question again.

Now, although as the Pope, whoever he may be, is the prisoner of the Roman question on account of the international character of the Holy See, nevertheless, each Pope is free to narrow or to broaden the sphere of action as regards ecclesiastical affairs, the relations between the two Governments and the exchange of courtesies etween the sovereigns and the hierarchy. A churchman and a pious man, Pius X. is in great distress at the painful results of the dissension. We are told of his firm will to use more kindness and graciousness in the relations of the State in order to prevent the conflict from reacting on the religious situation. That is the reason for his audiences and his interviews with Deputies and Senators, for his desire to raise the religious standard, and that is naturally the reason for the permission granted to Cardinal Svampa, who had been in-vited by the Prefect of Bologna to be present at the festivals. As will be noticed, the initiative does not start from the Pope and does not bear the "historic" meaning which newspapers have attributed to it so generously. Though the Pope may declare himself in the provinces, the favorer of agreements and the introducer of peace at Rome, his rights, his duty, the necessities of the situation and the interests of the universal Church oblige him to an uncompromising resistance until the day when the logic of things will bring about the proper form for Papal independence This short explanation does away, too, with another interpretation that the newspapers have put upon it. They are making an effort to establish some sort of a contradiction between the visit of Cardinal Svampa and the Papal note of protest against M. Loubet's journey to the Quirinal. "Why," they cry out, "does Pius X condemn at Rome what he authorizes at Bologna?" No compromise in the capitol, the acceptance of accomplished facts in the province; who can explain such contradiction and confusion? From my explanation, it is clear that the contrast exists only in imagination of persons who do not know the facts.

It is probable, unless the audacious hopes of the Quirinal and its consequent disappointment check the action of the Holy Father, that Pius X. will aid with all his heart and all his power in the work of a closer understanding in the provinces, but many and apparently unsurmountable obstacles rise up everywhere. When the Quirinal people perceive that this pacification is not a prelude to abdication of Rome, that on the contrary resistance will increase as well as the Pope's gentleness, the Third Rome will have its revenge. Hurt once again, Victor Emanuel III. will besiege the Vatican. If, on the other hand, the pelicy of reconciliation can be carried out escefully, the Roman question, without being sent to the background, will require more time for its solution. There are many excellent people who wish that the day may be put off in order that events and Providence may clear the ground of Rome before the future edifice is begun. That is where the plan of Pius X., if it is allowed to develop, opens new prospects in the future. Firm, resolute, obstinate and apostolic, alive and loving life, eager for reform and for action, Pius X. is a man who may command events and may obtain from them providential solutions. INNOMINATO.

AFTER NEW IDEAS IN COOKING. Mine. Blay's Rotisserie Closed for the Summer While She's Abroad.

Mme. Gaston Blay has closed her rôtieserie at 84 Columbus avenue for the summer and sailed yesterday for Paris On her return to this country in August she will oped the rôtisserie again and in September resume her cooking classes for amateurs and for professional cooks. Mme. Blay while in Paris will devote her time to the discovery of what is new in gastronomic art and bring back to this country what she thinks suited to the taste When the rôtisserie is reopened in the

When the rotisserie is reopened in the fall a daily bill of fare will be prepared and will be sent to regular patrons. This will bear the names and prices of the dishes to be had every day, and this list will be frequently changed.

The first few months of its existence has proved that there is a need for a rotisserie in this city, and Mme. Blay expects next year to increase greatly the facilities of her establishment. Her cooking classes will, as usual, be carried on in the large room arranged for that purpose. arranged for that purpose
